• The story of Barron Heating •

BARRON
IMPROVING LIVES™

Dan Barron was the son of a sheet metal worker. After Dan graduated high school, he became one too.

Soon after, Dan joined the US Marines as an Aircraft Mechanic.
But after two years, he wanted to return to his family trade.

Dan quickly became one of the best sheet metal workers in Seattle.

People said he would “do the work of three men.”

So work, work, work he did.

Hard-working Dan married his lovely wife Vivian, and the two had four children.

Dan and Vivian had big dreams.
They wanted to help families just like yours have warm homes.

So they started their own business,
which they called Barron Heating & Air Conditioning.

The business was very small to start. The Barron family garage became the shop. Vivian's kitchen table became the office.

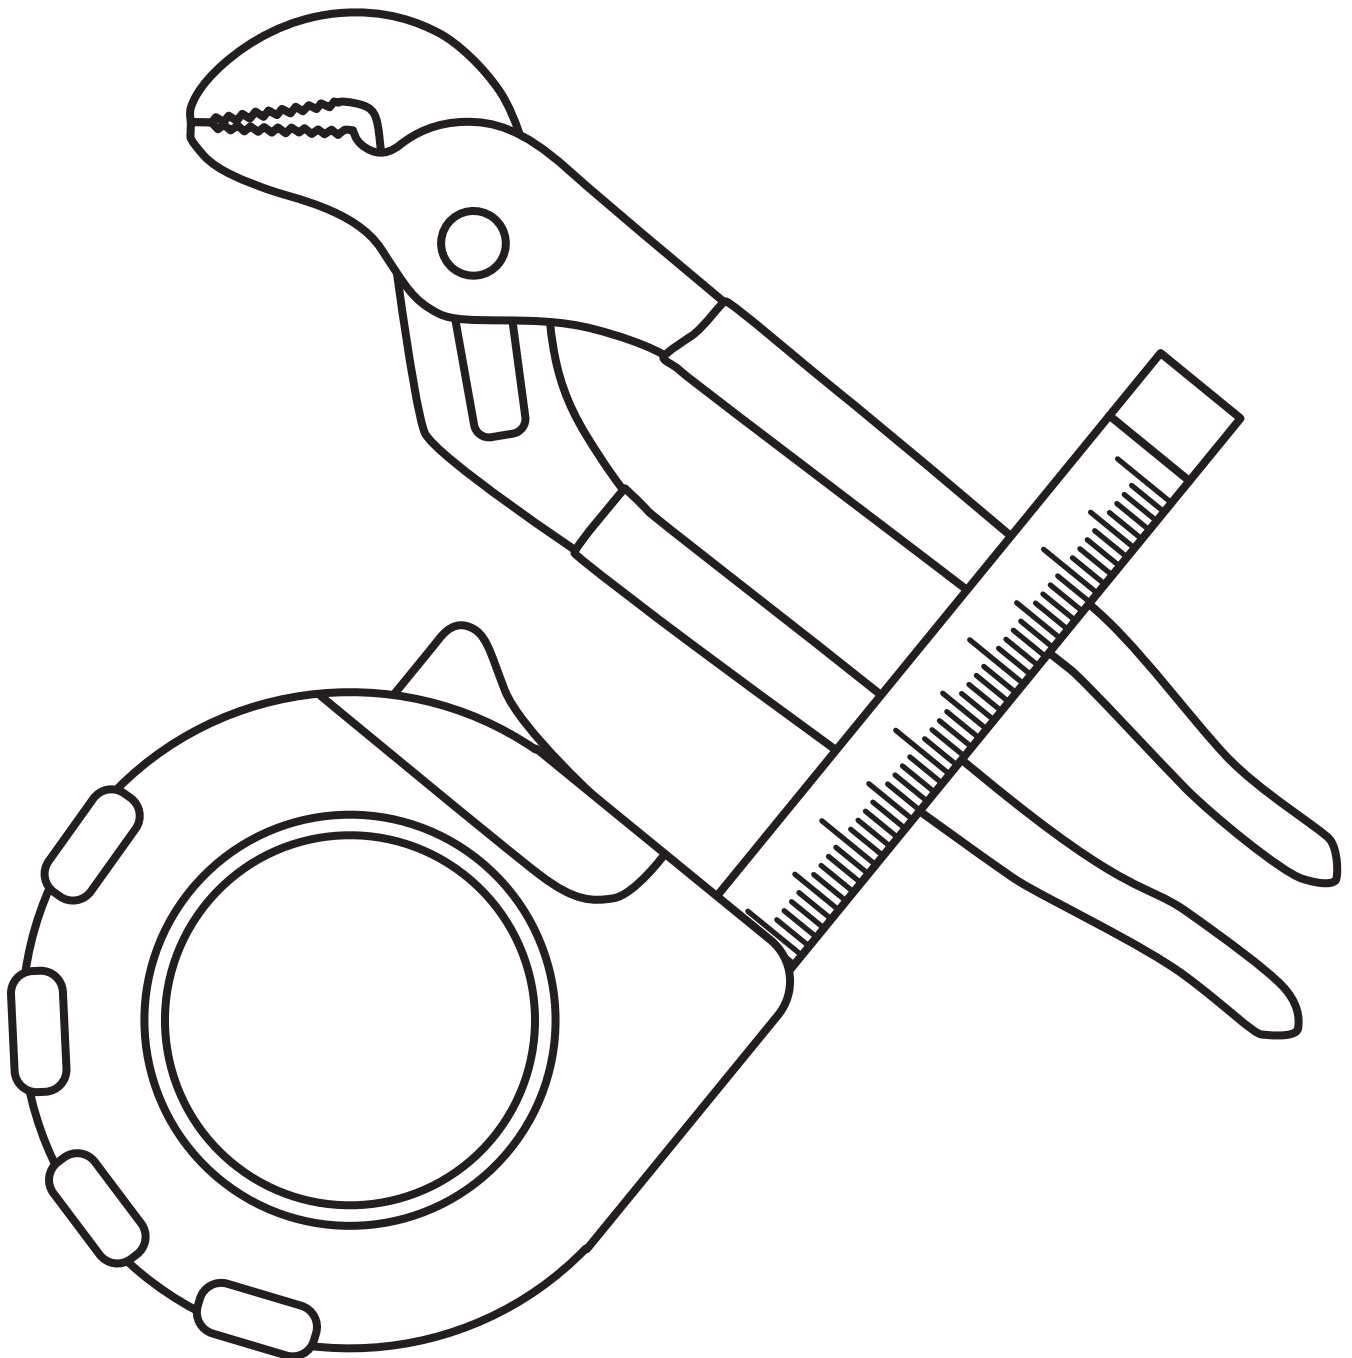

The Barrons pushed on, and the family moved to Bellingham to grow their business.

The Barrons' youngest son, John, was a busy kid—like an egg in a skillet. And boy, did John look up to his dad.

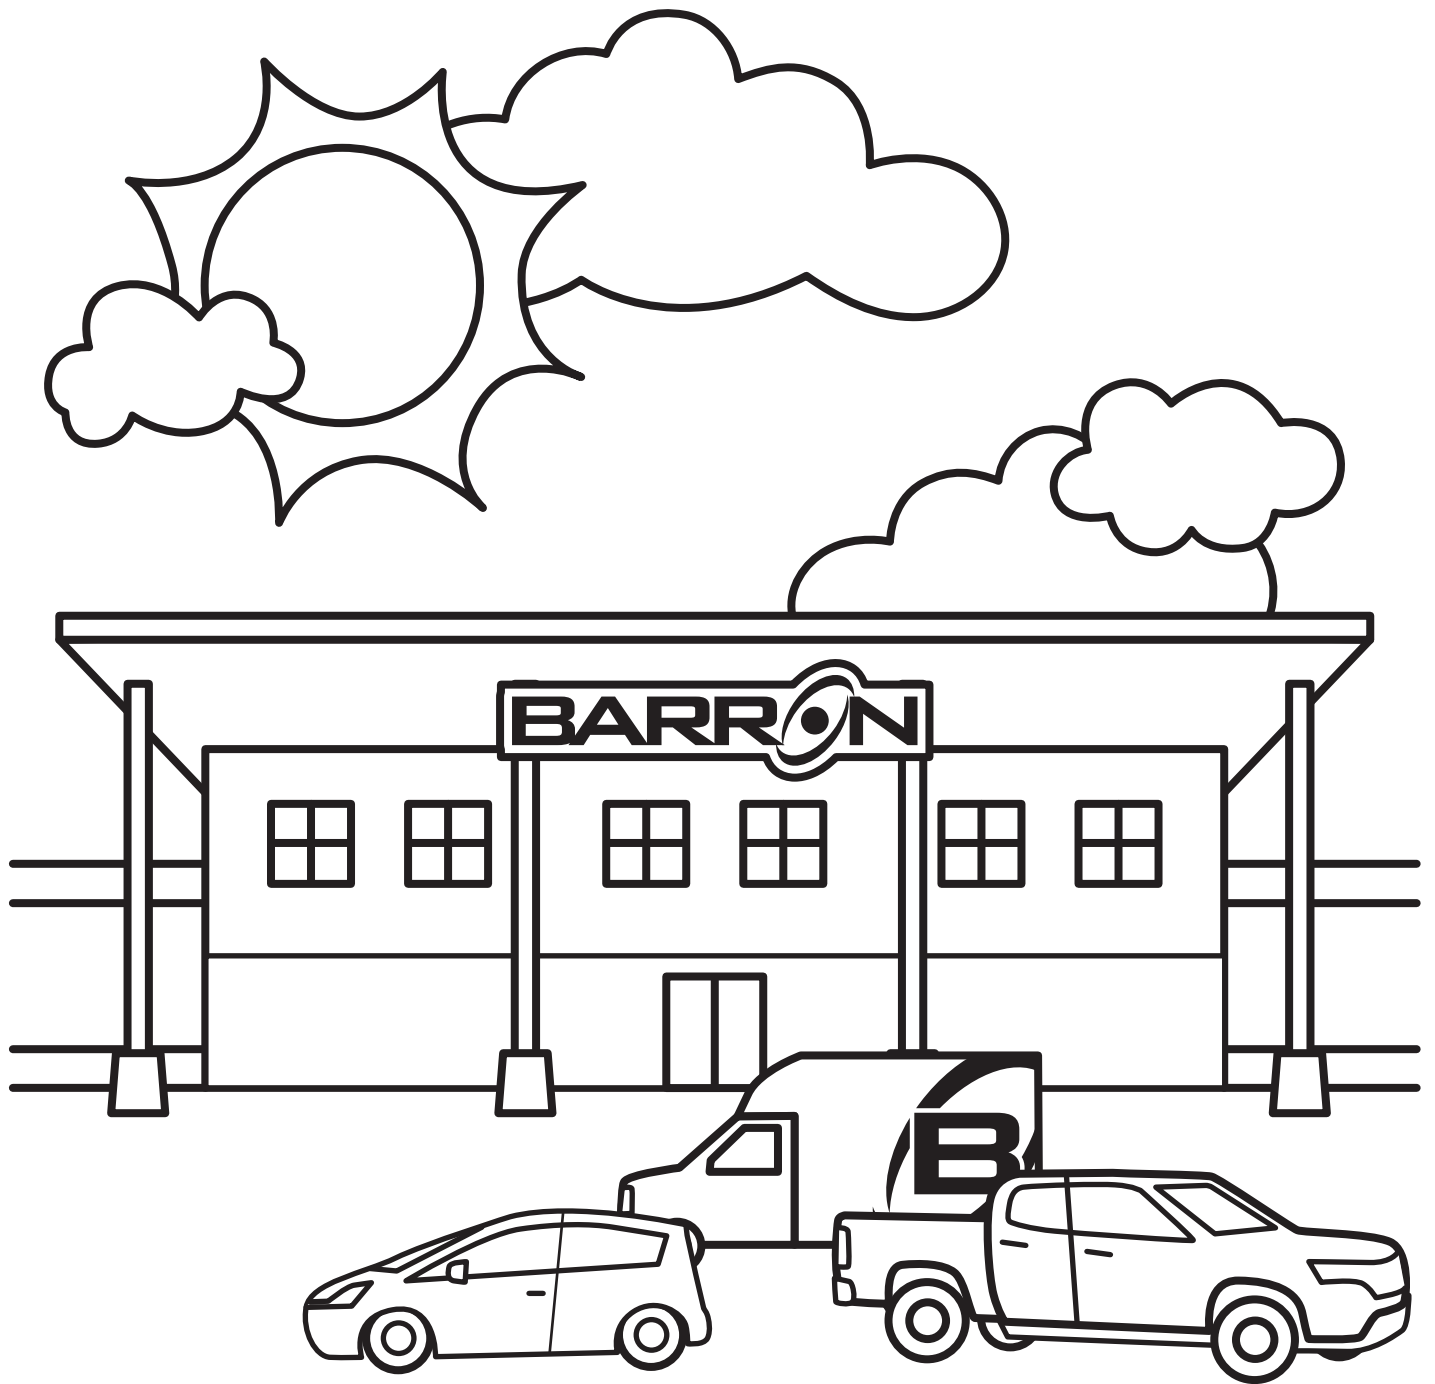

John started out as a part-time sheet metal worker for the family business. He went on to work as a mechanic, and then became a salesman.

As the company grew, John stepped up as a leader.

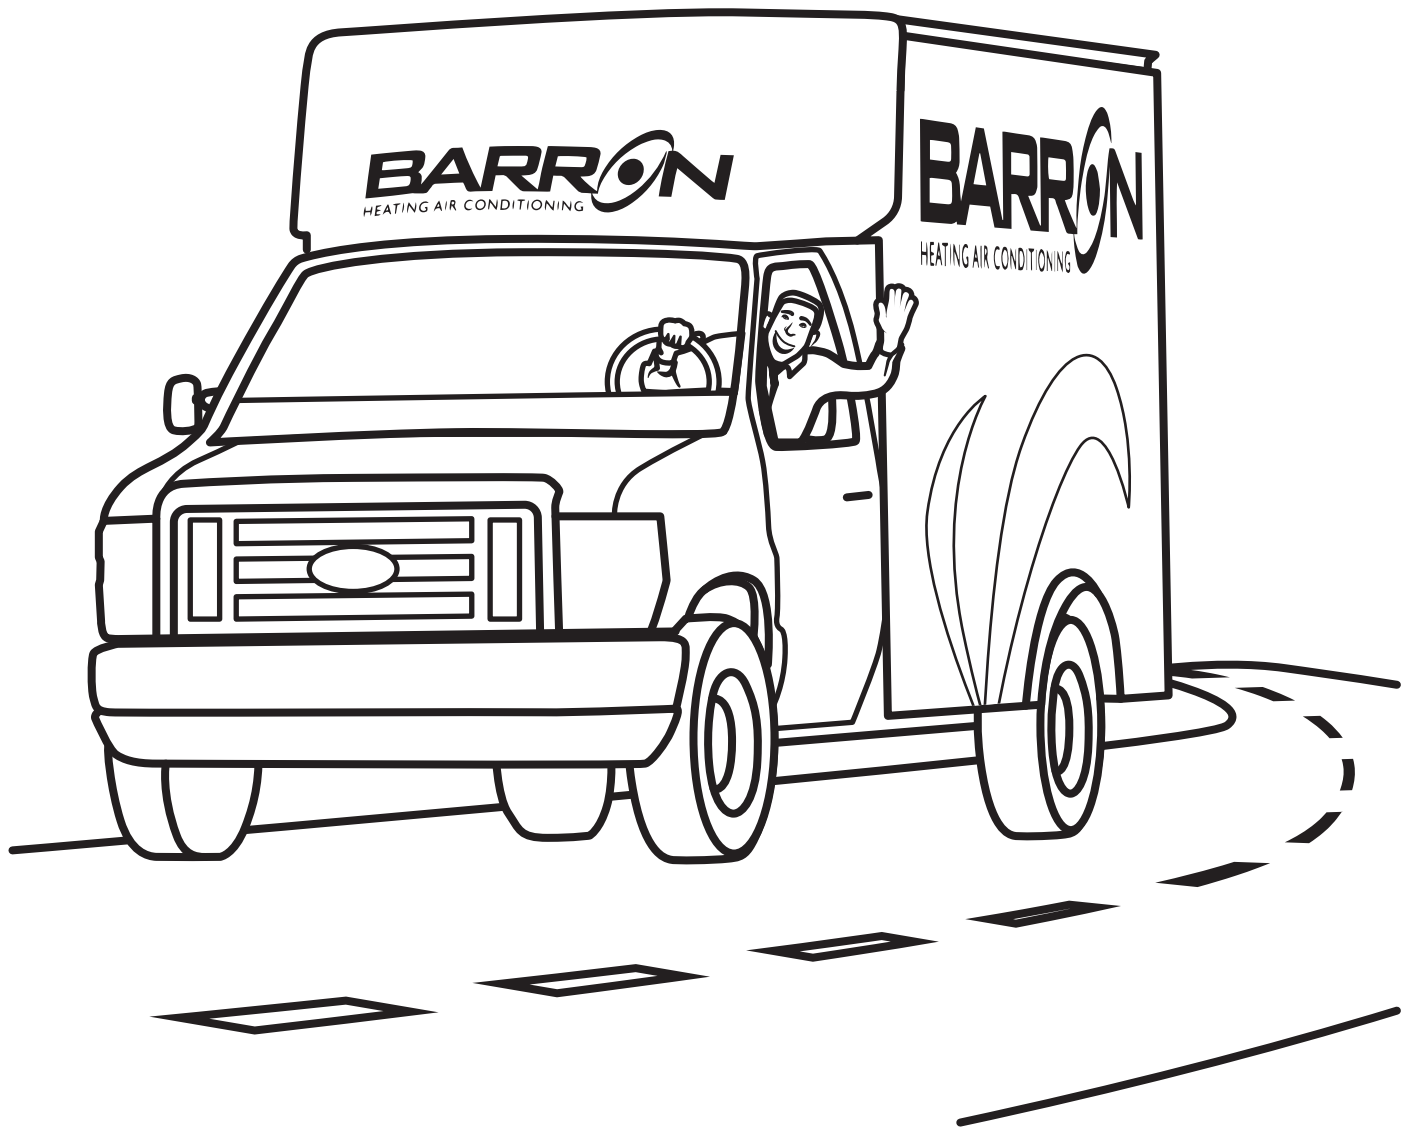

When his parents retired, he became a part-owner of Barron Heating. And John's son Brad is next to follow in the family business.

With a lot of hard work and a lot of heart, the business has grown and grown. Today, 150 people work for the Barron family.

So next time you go for a drive,
watch for a Barron truck
and give 'em a wave.

Spreading warmth and cheer is the Barron way, from our family to yours!
